scandinavian spirit

Most conversations about mid-century modern design wouldn't be complete without a Scandinavian mention, and it's no coincidence. Both aesthetics came to prominence in the 1950s and both feature very similar elements.

Clean, crisp and uncluttered, these styles favor simplicity and a sense of minimalism. That ethos suits bedroom suites perfectly, where serenity reigns supreme. Light finishes, cozy textures and touches of nature are what dreams are made of.

the bright side

So we've discussed many of the key elements of the mid-century modern design movement, but there's a certain wow factor that brings it all together: color. The hues used represent a mix of bold splashes and natural notes.

Taking inspiration from the outdoors, you'll find rich wood tones and cool, calming blues. To take it up a notch, you can always add sunny yellows, lush greens and vibrant oranges. Think of your exterior environment as the ultimate palette.
